Sacred to the memory of Augustin Prevost, Esq. Major General in his Majesty's army, Colonel of the second battalion of the 60th regiment of foot, &c. &c. By birth a native and citizen of Geneva. He entered into the service of Great Britain in 1756, in the rank of Major, and uniformly distinguishing himself with the zeal and honour of a true soldier, he merited, and, on repeated occasions, received the thanks, both public and private, of the Generals under whom he served. He finished his more active military career with the memorable defence of Savannah in Georgia in 1779, where he commanded, and in a post, entrenched merely on the spur of the occasion, sustained a formal siege against the combined armies of France and America, commanded by the Count D'Estaing, of about three times his own number, supported by a powerful fleet, and furnished with a numerous and well-served artillery: he repulsed them in a general and well-maintained assault, and finally compelled them to raise the siege, thirtythree days from its being closely invested, twenty-six of open trenches, and fifteen of open batteries. As a man he was mild, unassuming, and modest, perhaps, approaching to a fault; as a soldier, manly, firm, determined; possessing himself equally in the hour of danger as in that of the calmest retirement: his solicitude on every occasion of public import was solely directed to the honourable discharge of his duty to the king and country he had chosen for bis.—A kind husband, a tender father, a sincere friend, a humane man.—He was also eminent in all the virtues and duties of private life. This monument is erected by the companion of some of his most trying scenes, now his afflicted widow, in pious and affectionate testimony of her gratitude to him who was the best of husbands and the best of men. Ob. May 4, 1786. æt. 63.

He died in harness, while addressing a Public Meeting in the City of London, on his favourite theme, Universal Brotherhood. Like his kinswoman, the celebrated Elizabeth Fry, he belonged to the 'Society of Friends', but, while he never scrupled, if expedient, to assert his own opinions, he was ever ready to acknowledge that others had an honest right to differ from him. Epitaphs on departed friends are often too laudatory, but I can testify to the truth of the inscription recited above, that 'his life was a living epistle of Peace, Love and Brotherhood,
